Will New York become
the next natural gas
capital of the country?

Paul Hartman is the Director of State Government Relations for Chesapeake Energy Corporation. He oversees Chesapeake's New York State Government Relations operations - promoting the development and implementation of public policies that advance the development of indigenous, clean burning natural gas resources in the state. Mr. Hartman has an extensive background in public policy development, campaign planning, media advocacy, grassroots engagement and direct lobbying. Throughout his career as a lobbyist or legislative staffer, he has worked extensively on health, labor, housing, and environmental issues.

Or the first state to pass a moratorium on any new gas drilling?

Jannette M. Barth, Ph.D., is president of J.M. Barth & Associates, Inc., an economic research and consulting firm. She has worked in the fields of economic analysis and econometric modeling and forecasting for over 35 years. As a landowner in New York's Delaware County, in the Marcellus Shale region, Dr. Barth became interested in the impacts of gas drilling by hydraulic fracturing. After reviewing the existing studies of economic impacts of gas drilling in New York, Dr. Barth authored a summary report, "Unanswered Questions About the Economic Impact of Gas Drilling in the Marcellus Shale: Don't Jump to Conclusions."
